

—+ PENELOPE HARWOOD | Hands

She sat on the edge of the bed
Clutching her worn bag
With both hands

She had held
Her dying child
In those hands.
Pushed away tears
Sealed for death
In vain

And now she waited.
Her body heavily laden
With the years
Her hands peeling with age
Her memories locked in
For the final act.